

by Martin Mittelmeier

July 2013 / 304pp

Non-Fiction

This book is outside of the five-year window for guaranteed assistance with English language translation. We suggest getting in touch with the relevant funding body for an informal conversation about the possibility of support. Please refer to to our recommendations page for books that are currently covered by our funding guarantee.

Adorno in Naples

Adorno in Neapel

review

Adorno in Naples is a highly original book which brings to life a short phase in European intellectual history when the romantic landscape of the Bay of Naples in southern Italy became a magnet for writers, poets and philosophers. Martin Mittelmeier's thoughtful blend of travel-writing and philosophy coincides with a revival of interest in the Frankfurt School and its leading light, Theodor Adorno.

Southern Italy was traditionally the end point of the Grand Tour undertaken by the European aristocracy and literati during the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries. At the beginning of the twentieth century figures such as Bertolt Brecht, Maxim Gorky and Theodor Adorno flocked to Capri and Sorrento. This meeting of minds in the South, which has a British parallel in the Bloomsbury circle's enthusiasm for the Sorrentine peninsula, has never been explored or written about before. Like all tourists, these intellectuals were looking for undiscovered, special places. But, of course, as soon as such places become talked about they begin to lose their appeal. Mittelmeier maintains that the topic of tourism is the starting point for Adorno's subsequent development of his Critical Theory.

The young Adorno is a musician who is studying composition in Vienna. At first he follows the tourist trail unwillingly, accompanied by aspiring political journalist Siegfried Kracauer. But soon he is enchanted by the landscape, both for its southern gentleness and its wild, untamable qualities. Mittelmeier recounts how Adorno's daily diary entries at this time lay the foundations for his mature philosophical thinking. His thoughts are inspired both by the natural world and by his discussions with fellow intellectuals and are full of fascinating observations and unique formulations. Concepts such as 'porosity', which here refers to a geological characteristic of the ubiquitous pumice rock, come to inform the social analysis in Adorno's later work, where he describes how the bourgeoisie aims to fill all creative spaces in the porous fabric of society in order to cement their power. Mittelmeier argues convincingly that this phase in Adorno's life, unencumbered by academic constraints and regulations, reanimates his later philosophy, which has often been considered difficult and hermetic.

Adorno in Naples furthers our understanding of the European intelligentsia during the early twentieth century, and is an invitation to rediscover Adorno.

about the author

Martin Mittelmeier was born in 1971 and is seen as one of the most prominent publishing editors for contemporary literature in Germany. After eleven years at Luchterhand Verlag, he has been head of fiction at Eichborn Verlag in Cologne since 2012. The PhD comparatist has published several works on philology and philosophy.

Previous works include:

Ungeschriebene Werke (2006)

rights information

Verlagsgruppe Random House GmbH

Rights Department

Neumarkter Str. 28

81673 Munich, Germany

Contact: Ms. Gesche Wendebourg

Tel: +49 (0)89/ 4136-3313

gesche.wendebourg@randomhouse.de

www.randomhouse.de

Siedler Verlag (founded in 1980) is one of the most prestigious publishers for nonfiction books on political, historical, social, cultural and scientific topics in German-speaking countries. In addition to historical works and books on current events, the list includes biographies and autobiographies of well-known personalities from history, politics, and culture. Siedler has an international reputation as a forum for readers interested in politics and history. Authors published by Siedler include Anne Applebaum, José Carreras, Antonio Damasio, Joachim Gauck, Martin Geck, Robert Gerwarth, Daniel Goldhagen, Mikhail Gorbachev, Stephen Greenblatt, Brian Greene, Robert Kagan, Daniel Kahneman, Eric Kandel, Peter Longerich, Geert Mak, Wynton Marsalis, Christian Meier, Joseph Nye, Olivier Roy, Jeffrey D. Sachs, Simon Schama, Helmut Schmidt, Tom Segev, and Joseph Stiglitz.